

Learning styles are the way each person absorbs information best. One person could learn really well from text on a paper while another learns best when the information is relayed to them auditorily. I personally had always struggled with reading because it stressed me out on a personal level, I was always so scared that I was taking in the information wrong or picturing it in my head in an incorrect way. Once I found out about audio books though, all those fears went away and I was able to absorb the story being told in the way I could any other method of media. I have always been a very audio based person, to the point I'm aiming for a certificate in sound design so I can better understand the technical aspects of good audio. Text books were the bane of my existence through school until I started putting them through text to speech and everything became so much clearer to me.
